PROLEGOMENON

No one knows the hazards in publishing "Ten Best" lists better than the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. After all, the Board inaugurated the practise of annually picking the ten best films of the year.

You will probably cry aloud in pain over the inclusion or omission of a particular picture in the following lists—the Letters Department of FILMS IN REVIEW has in the past contained many piteous examples of similar suffering. But these annual selections do have value as a rough approximation of the best films of the talkie era.

Any method of "Ten Best" selection, other than an individual's merely personal choice, has defects. The Board's has fewer than most. The Board's Review Committee, consisting of about 175 public-spirited men and women with an interest in the motion picture and a mature sense of social responsibility, votes on the pictures to be recommended to the Board's Committee on Exceptional Films, and this Committee, composed of men and women with critical experience and flair, vote on the "Ten Best."

Just what the Committee on Exceptional Films cites annually has evolved through the years. In 1930-31, for example, the Committee listed its "Ten Best" alphabetically. In '32 it picked a best film of the year (I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang) and listed its nine other choices alphabetically. The following year it arranged its "Ten Best" according to the number of votes each film received. In '37 it began citing the year's best performances, and in '45 refined this to naming the best actress and actor, adding, in '54, the best supporting actress and supporting actor. For a time the Committee considered documentaries separately from fiction films, but during World War II there were so many exceptional documentaries the Committee abandoned a distinction which was, at bottom, only formal. Toward the end of the war, and for a few years after it, the Committee did not use separate categories for American and foreign films.

It is a pleasure to record that the present publication of these "Ten Best" lists was made possible by the generosity of John B. Turner, who felt, as do we all, that it would make a fitting souvenir of the 50th anniversary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures—the first, and still the foremost, public organization devoted to the movies as an entertainment, an art, and a social force.
